

PATRICIA "TRICY" MAGADINI A.I.A

Patricia Magadini earned a Bachelor of Science in Interior Design in 1974 followed by a Bachelor of Architecture from the University of Arizona in 1978. Patricia's creative talents were inspired by her family; her mother was an artist and her father was a structural engineer. Shortly after receiving her architecture degree, Patricia and her family moved to Dallas where she gained experience with educational facilities, municipal projects and client-based, high end, single family residences. Giving back to the community was also very important to Patricia, so in 1992, she helped found the Texas Community Design Center which provided design services for low income housing. Her creativity helped to provide well designed innovative housing to low income communities throughout Texas.

Her move to Dallas also reconnected her to her classmate Bruce Bernbaum. This friendship eventually led to the formation of Bernbaum-Magadini Architects in 1998. Patricia's leadership responsibilities include the overall design direction for the firm and project development.
